Tuesday, 7/26/22 Keynote Speakers: MICHAEL MCSHEEHAN, a special education expert & MIKE ANDERSON, a general education expert, have been consulting together in elementary and secondary schools as well as training and coaching general education teachers to provide inclusive academic instruction. In their keynote, “Investing in General Educators: Designing Quality Instruction to Engage All Learners,” they will share their positive approach to assist general educators as a way of expanding inclusive opportunities for students with disabilities. Their approach centers on designing quality instruction to engage ALL learners by focusing on effective methods for teaching students with disabilities. They will highlight REAL classroom and student examples from across the K-12 grades that are both inspirational and practical. In their follow-up forum, “Designing Quality Instruction to Engage All Learners: Methods & Examples,” Mike and Michael unpack several methods and examples of inclusive academic instruction: 1) build social emotional learning and choice in academic lessons; 2) differentiate learning with embedded specially designed instruction; and 3) increase student engagement through learner-centered language and safe, shame free environments. Additionally, examples will show the impact of lesson design on student behavior – and how common-sense approaches create intrinsic motivation for students.
